

Highlights

Exact junction and register choices change predicted normal-transcript matches.

A one-base register shift creates an eleven-base normal-NR4A3 gap match.

Different NR4A3 acceptors require different sequence designs.

Artificial exon joins do not establish an EMC-specific pairing excess.

The catalogue supports design inspection, not established biological selectivity.